Foreword

It is my great pleasure to say a few brief words at the beginning of this important volume. The ISI has a long and proud history starting from 1885. A scan of the cumulative membership reveals many famous names who have made extremely important contributions to statistics and society. The ISI as an organisation has had a significant influence on international statistics and continues to do so. The ISI remains strong as indicated by the increasing numbers attending the biennial sessions.

We cannot rest on our laurels. Over our long history there have been many changes in our activities. We must learn from our history and continue to grow and enhance our activities to remain the peak professional organisation for statistics in the future.

There is an incredible amount of work involved in putting together this cumulative membership list. I would like to sincerely thank Mr Gerrit Stemerding for this. He volunteered to search the membership database and archives to obtain the required information. Technology advances will enable us to much more easily build on Gerrit's work and keep the cumulative membership list up to date.

I would also like to thank Statistics Norway most sincerely for printing this volume for the ISI membership.

“There should be an error in every book, so that even a stupid person may consider himself smart.”

Could this Chinese proverb serve as a motto for this publication? I would not dare to suggest that I put in some intentional errors in order to satisfy anyone. In an organisation with so many learned members like the ISI, this would be an insult. Nevertheless, I expect that the many errors that I failed to detect will be noticed by one of our members. All such error reports are highly welcome!

It was with great enthusiasm that I took up the task of compiling this historical list. During the work this enthusiasm even grew, due to the many kind remarks I received from members who were contacted for providing missing information. Thank you all for that.

I hope you will enjoy reading this booklet as much as I enjoyed preparing it.

Errata

To our regret, during the transition of the original Word document to a pdf document suitable for a professional printer, a few errors were inadvertently introduced. They all are related to the use of special characters.

Members of the International Statistical Institute A Cumulative List for the Period 1885-2002

The International Statistical Institute is one of the oldest scientific societies in the world. It was founded in 1885 but before this, beginning in 1853, its precursor was the International Statistical Congresses. At the initiative of the visionary Belgian statistician Adolphe Quetelet, these congresses convened several times, culminating in the founding of the ISI in 1885. For this reason, during the 2003 ISI Session in Berlin we may celebrate 150 years of international statistical co-operation.

A second memorable anniversary is the fact that ISI gathers in Berlin exactly 100 years after the first Berlin Session of 1903.

For such occasions, a commemorative publication is called for. At the 1985 Centennial Session in Amsterdam, a booklet was issued with details on all persons who had ever been an ISI member since its foundation in 1885. This 'blue book' was received very enthusiastically and many members still cherish it. The Council accepted a proposal to develop an updated version of this publication and Mr. Gerrit Stemerding volunteered to search the membership database and the archives in order to obtain the information needed. The ISI Council gratefully acknowledges the contribution of Statistics Norway to this project by providing their printing facilities.

The contents

This publication is not just a mere list of members. It also provides some facts on the ISI, plus listings of all Sessions and Presidents. In addition, an attempt has been made to present some statistics on statisticians, such as the mean age at which people were elected as members in different periods of the institute's existence.

About the membership list

Thousands of names are included in the list, including persons that were among the first members as far back as 1885, as well as those elected as member in 2002. For practical reasons, the list ends with the members elected at the ISI Council meeting of August 2002.

For each member the following information is provided:

- Full family name
- Full first and middle names
- Nationality
- Birth date

- Year of election
- Year of resignation
- Date of decease.

All information is as complete as we could make it, but alas there are some gaps. Should any reader have additional information, or detect errors in this publication list, we would be very grateful to receive feedback. Such information may be directed to the ISI Permanent Office, preferably by e-mail: isi@cbs.nl

Member's names

All names represented in this list appear as they were submitted to the ISI. While this may seem obvious, it is not as straightforward as one might think. In most European countries, the spelling of family names is rather standardised since Napoleonic times but even after that, unintentional changes occurred. Especially in the melting pot of cultures that formed in North America in the middle of the 19th century, immigrants from European countries, many of who were hardly literate, did not always succeed in properly adapting their names to an English pronunciation. These errors were often compounded by the fact that also many civil registration clerks did not always master the English language as well as they might have.

Nevertheless, 'normal' western names did not cause many difficulties, though some inconsistencies occurred. Scottish names like Mac Donald are mostly written with a space between Mac and Donald. However, several varieties occur like Mc Donald or Macdonald. A similar phenomenon is not uncommon with names from the Netherlands: De Vries became Devries in the USA. In addition, German names like Müller either lost their 'Umlaut' or this Umlaut was replaced by an additional 'e', resulting in Muller or Mueller.

For languages that do not use Western script such as Chinese, Russian or Hebrew, there is the additional problem of transliteration. There have not always been standardised systems for transliterating and there have been changes in existing ones. Up to about 1980, in most western languages, China's capital city was known as Peking, but nowadays as Beijing. In this present list, for example, we have two names that in Russian script might be the same, Zolotareff (elected 1905) and Zolotarev (elected 1974).

Languages are in a constant state of change. Apart from idiomatic developments, most languages undergo official spelling reforms such as the 1999 German revision that caused a great deal of controversy. Spelling changes normally do not affect the writing of names. But there are exceptions: in Danish the character 'å' was introduced around 1950 to replace the older spelling 'aa'. 'Århus' on present day maps is 'Aarhus' on older ones. Similarly, the German 'ß' changed to 'ss' in many words with the aforementioned 1999 reform.

In addition, technical limitations have introduced various challenges. The oldest membership forms are almost all hand-written and thus all kinds of accents and typical language-dependent characters were used. Then came the era of typewriters that could produce only 'standard' accented characters like à, ü or î. Unless one uses a typewriter adapted for a particular language, it is not possible to type a German 'ß', a Danish 'å', a Czech 'č' or a Polish 'ł'. The computer era initially started with even fewer capabilities than typewriters in this regard. Many membership forms bear the traces of the time at which they were produced. Now, in 2003, it is possible to produce nearly all non-standard non-western characters, but even now we do not always have the information we should have concerning these diacritics.

Then there is the problem of different naming systems in different cultures. In some, the western concept of a family name does not apply. Chinese names usually have their 'family name' first: Kong Chi and Kong Lee could be brothers. Moreover, in Spanish names, it is usual to add the mother's surname after the father's surname, hence 'Angel Vegas Perez'. We did not attempt to unify or 'correct' any names: we have accepted them just as they were submitted at the time of application for ISI membership.

Sorting order

Some languages have 'non-standard' characters as mentioned above. These characters, or character combinations, could have a place in the alphabetical order that does not look logical from an English language point of view. For example, the Danish æ, ø and å come after v, x, y (w and z do not exist in Danish words). The Dutch combination ? was traditionally regarded as one single character placed between x and z. In Spanish the letter combinations ch and ll are treated as single characters as well. Most computer programs will sort characters on the basis of their ASCII value, which results in placing special and accented characters, like ß or á, at the very end. In this publication, names are sorted as if they were written in English. So a, á, à, â, ä and å are handled as equivalent characters as far as sequential order is concerned.

Another aspect that has to be taken into account while sorting names is that of the prefixes of names. Germany has prefixes such as Von Sachs, in Belgium and the Netherlands De Vries or Van der Genugten is not uncommon. Semitic languages have their Al Safar, El Saidi and Ben Zvi, while in Ireland one encounters O'Brien and in Scotland Mc Neil. Sometimes such prefixes are written with a space or a dash between them followed by the rest of the name, but they can occur written together as well. For our purposes, all such varieties are considered as being equivalent and are sorted accordingly. We neither used the method of neglecting such prefixes while sorting, which is customary with Dutch names for example.

First and middle names

Typically, official first and sometimes middle names are indicated on one's birth certificate. The actual name(s) used may differ significantly from the officially registered name. Joseph becomes Joe, William will be Bill and a Dutch Cornelis is often known as Kees. We tried to lend this publication a more or less ceremonial appearance by using the complete official names wherever possible.

Again, we had to depend on the input provided by the submitted membership forms. Wherever possible we have asked members to provide us with the names that represented simple initials. Due to high mailing costs, we restricted ourselves to contact only those members that were accessible via e-mail. An appeal that appeared in the ISI Newsletter resulted in many additions and updates to the existing e-mail addresses.

Nationality

A two-character code is used to indicate nationality. A complete list of these codes is given. In its essence it is the so-called Alpha code, but our codes may differ from the standard, as we preserve the obsolete codes for those countries that no longer exist. To name but a few: Soviet Union, Rhodesia, Burma, Czechoslovakia etc. There have been countless changes in countries and country designations over the time-span we are reporting. Not only country names have changed; country boundaries have as well. For example, the city of Odessa was once part of Russia, then of the USSR and now of the Ukraine. Leipzig was first a part of Germany, then of the German Democratic Republic and is now German again. German Danzig became Polish Gdansk etc. In most of the African, East Asian and Balkan regions, things become even more complicated: the name Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was used for a federation that in the 1990's split in several independent countries. Two of these - Serbia and Montenegro- formed a new federation under the old name, but while checking the final text for this publication an e-mail was received from the UN informing us that the official name is from now on Serbia and Montenegro. The corresponding Alpha-code has still to be decided upon by the ISO. Like indicated earlier, we used the data appearing on the original membership forms, without any attempt to adapt to the present-day situation. Of course later corrections given by members themselves have been processed.

Birth date

Collecting and storing birth dates has been subject to some problems too. First, the membership forms have changed several times over the 1885-2002 period. It was not always made clear on these forms which format should be used: the Month-Day-Year or the Day-Month-Year sequence. Therefore 05-04-1919 could be May 4 as well as April 5! Some members did not notice that we asked for the complete birth date, and only gave the year of their birth. We have attempted to correct and update birth dates as much as possible.

Year of election

Even this simple date creates ambiguity as the election process occurs in two stages. First, the Elections Committee has the duty of examining all nominations and making a recommendation for the consideration and approval of the ISI Executive Committee. People elected in the second round of a particular year will not have their membership confirmed until the next year.

Year of resignation

There are two typical ways in which an ISI membership is terminated: members may elect to resign their membership or the membership ends as a result of the member's death. Unfortunately, an additional way to end membership has emerged. The names of members who fail to pay their dues for two years or more are submitted to the Council with the recommendation that their membership be terminated. In very rare circumstances, a membership may be revoked.

For the purposes of this publication, we do not wish to make any distinction as to the manner in which a membership has been terminated. Under the heading 'Year of resignation', we have combined both the 'active' and the 'passive' resignation.

When no date is entered under this heading, membership is still active or it has ended in a natural way with the death of the member.

Date of Death

We are generally made aware of the dates when our members have passed away, even in cases where they have died a considerable time after they officially resigned their membership. In many cases however, we only know the year that they passed away and not the exact date.

Data compilation

All membership data have been stored in a computerised system. The only exception is those who were no longer an ISI member at the moment this system was introduced. Luckily, this was some years before the 1985 booklet was compiled. That publication could thus serve as a 'base' for the pre-computer era.

To collect all data, several steps were taken:

- a data set of all members in the database was made, with aforementioned data;
- care was taken to check which names in the 1985 list were not in the computer database and add them when necessary;

- all information on non-plausible or missing data was checked. An effort was made to try and complete these by first consulting the original membership forms in the ISI archives;
- members were contacted by e-mail for additional information;
- reference was made to other information sources such as obituaries in scientific journals;
- the Internet was utilised to obtain additional information.

An extra complication was caused by the fact that the first version of the database accepted only the year of birth instead of insisting on complete dates. Subsequent versions that would work only with complete dates then translated these birth-years-only into fictional birth dates of January 1! Many members therefore were incorrectly administrated as being born on New Years Day. All January 1 birth dates have been checked against the original data in the membership forms. In cases where this was not possible, we discarded January 1 as a birth date and report only the birth year.

Another problem was the 10-character limit the present database employs for the field 'First Name'. When the complete first and middle names are known and they exceed this limit, an abbreviation is used such as Gerald H. All abbreviations have been checked in the membership forms for the complete names. Many members were subsequently asked by e-mail to provide additional information.

All information was stored in a spreadsheet to ensure more flexibility than the database could provide. An amazing feature of this spreadsheet is its inability to handle dates from before 1900. We have of course many such members and thus had to construct a separate 'column' with only the year portion of a date in a numerical format. Otherwise, it would not have been possible to compute something like a member's age at the moment of election.

An overview of the International Statistical Congresses and the Sessions of the ISI

The exchange of scientific knowledge is as old as science itself. As far as the statistical sciences are concerned, we are aware of a great deal of correspondence that took place in the era of Huygens and Pascal. However, systematic international co-operation and knowledge dissemination starts with the first International Statistical Congress, convened in 1853 in Brussels at the initiative of Adolphe Quetelet. In 1885, after a series of these Congresses, the ISI was founded during a meeting in London. Traditionally this meeting has been counted as zero in the enumeration of ISI Sessions.

The ISI Presidents

The first ISI President was Sir Rawson W. Rawson, who held this position from the founding congress in 1885 till 1899. During nearly the whole first century of the ISI, Presidents were in office for relatively long periods of time.

Starting in 1975, the Presidential term of office became limited to a 2-year period, although Presidents are effectively involved for a 6-year duration. Before serving as President, such individuals serve in the ISI Executive Committee for 2 years as President-Elect. After completing one's Presidential term, another 2 years is spent as member of the Council with the designation of Past-President. In this way continuity is guaranteed.

The ISI Permanent Office

The ISI Permanent Office serves as the headquarters of the Institute. Its main task is maintaining the membership list and handling the finances of the ISI. However, it also plays an important central role in the production and distribution process for many ISI publications and in the organisation of meetings, of which the biennial Sessions are the largest.

Since 1913, the Government of The Netherlands has provided accommodation to house the Office in the premises of the Dutch Central Statistical Bureau, now commonly known as Statistics Netherlands.

An Executive Director, who is also the Secretary/Treasurer of the ISI, manages the Office. Until 1955 this position was filled by the Dutch Director General for Statistics. After that, the function became independent of the Statistics Netherlands. The first independent Executive Director was the legendary Bart Lunenberg who was in office from 1955 until 1987. Since 1997 Marcel van de Broecke fills this role.

Long serving officials at the Permanent Office include Ann Daniels (1985), Tineke de Boer (1988) and Daniel Berze (1990) and in particular Ank Lepping who has served since 1974.

Explanation of the country codes

Among the codes there are several that refer to countries that no longer exist. They are still included as this list spans the entire 1885-2002 period. Because of these historical developments, countries may appear under more than one code. Unfortunately, the code LT is used twice: for older members (before ca. 1940) it means Latvia, for present day members (after ca. 1990) it stands for Lithuania.

The members

As is customary in genealogical and other publications, a ? sign refers to the birth date and a † sign to the date of death. A resignation date is given only if the member has resigned indeed, otherwise membership ends with the death of the member. A ? sign indicates (partly) unknown dates.

Statistics on statisticians

In total, there are 3842 persons who have ever been a member of the ISI. Three variables were analysed to get some insight into the population of those persons. These are the nationality plus the year in and the age at which one was selected as a member. Gender would have been an interesting variable too, but alas it was impossible to determine gender for the older members: it just was not recorded for a considerable time.

Nationality

There are 123 nationalities of which 85 have a frequency count of less than 20. By far the largest group is from the USA. Remarkable is the large number of members from countries with a relatively small population, like The Netherlands and Austria.

Nationality	Count	%

A subsequent step was to group nationalities by continent. Even with this seemingly simple operation, a few minor problems came up. First, a strict geographical classification was used. There are surveys in which a country like Israel is considered as part of Europe, something we did not choose to do. Second, it was impossible to determine whether a Russian citizen was born in the European or the Asian part of that country. Because the majority of Russian universities and government bureaus are located in the European part, we made the choice to consider all Russians as European. Third, we studied nationality, which is not necessarily identical to the country one is born in. We thus neglected situations like being born in an Africa country, while having a European nationality.

The results clearly support the necessity of recent efforts of the ISI Council to promote membership among statisticians from African and Central or South American countries.

Continent	Count	%
Europe	2069	53.9
North America	772	20.1
Asia	612	15.9
Africa	146	3.8
Australia and Oceania	123	3.2
Central and South America	120	3.1
Total	3842	100.0

Year of election

For only one person it was impossible to find the year of election. The distribution of the remaining 3841 persons over the years yields no particular insight, apart from a slight decrease in the more recent years. There is of course a huge initial number of members in the first two starting years. In addition, the gaps 1914-1922 and 1940-1946 caused by the two World Wars are evident.

Year	Count	%

For a better over-all insight, these years were grouped into periods. Note that not all periods have the same width: the more recent (and thus more relevant) ones are shorter. Starting with a before 1900 period, the first periods span 20 years, then come a few 10 year ones, and after 1970 we employed 5-year periods.

Age at Election

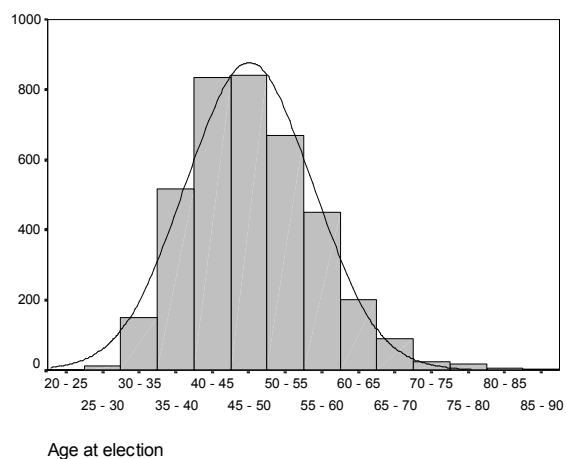

The age at election was computed in a straightforward manner: just subtract the year of birth from the year of election. For about half of the cases we may expect an error of 1 year with this simple method. We however had to accept this unavoidable inaccuracy, because it is not recorded on what date one is elected as a member. An advantage of this method is that it allowed us to compute the age of the over 200 members for which no exact birth date but only a birth year is known. For a further 24 members even the birth year is unknown, it was impossible to compute their age.

The computed indices for this variable are:

Mean	47.57
Std. Deviation	8.67
Skewness	.594
Kurtosis ¹	.562

The distribution seems more or less normal, with a slight skewness to the left and a small amount of leptokurtacy.

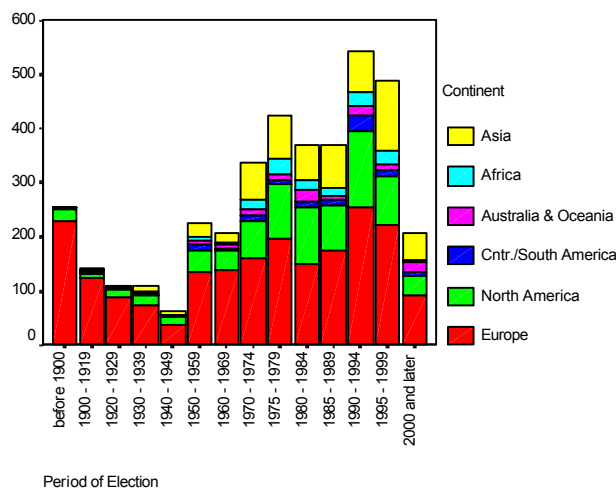

¹ All computations were made with SPSS. This program corrects the computed value of the kurtosis by subtracting the value 3 that a normal distribution would have. The reported kurtosis is thus relative to that from a normal distribution.

Trends over time

ISI officials have often wondered whether there exists a trend in age or nationality over the different time periods. It is more or less known that countries other than European were underrepresented in the first decades of ISI's existence, but exact data were not available. For the first time now, we have made more detailed analyses.

Nationality vs. Time

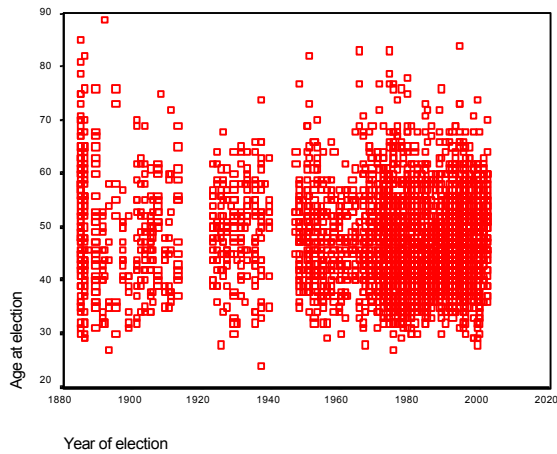

As a first result, we present a 'stacked bar chart' and a more detailed table of Nationality (grouped by Continent) vs. Time Period. By studying the row percentages in the table, one sees the European dominance diminish gradually over time. African and Asian members start appearing substantially only after WW II. Of course, this last effect is partly due to the decolonisation process: statisticians in European colonies in Africa and Asia initially came from the 'mother countries'. The need for more members from Africa and Central and South America we mentioned before, is strongly supported by this table.

Age vs. Time

To display the development of age over time, first a 'scatter plot' was constructed. Clearly visible are the gaps caused by the first and second World War.

Second, a 'box plot' shows, among other features, the gradually increasing variability of the age at which members are elected, especially after 1980.

For a more detailed insight, a table is constructed of the mean and standard deviation of Age at Election vs. Time Period.

The 208 members of the 2000+ period are less alarming than it seems: this period spans only the 3 years 2000-2002.

It is interesting to note that after the 'before 1990' period with slightly older members the mean age remained rather constantly between 47 and 48. From 1975 on members started to become elected at a somewhat younger age, this lasted until about 1990. The later periods however show an increase of this age. In addition, the changes in standard deviation are informative.

A Total Combination

In this final table, all three variables are combined.

Basically, this is again a cross tabulation of Nationality (grouped by Continent) vs. Time Period, but this time with the mean of Age at Election in each of the cells, instead of simple incidence counts.

A cautious conclusion could be that ISI members from African countries tend to be younger than their European and North American colleagues, this conclusion holds for all time periods.

Where in this table mean ages are printed italic this is an indication that they are based on fewer than five observations, hence these figures are less suitable for comparisons.
